INVITE PARENTS TO BE MORE ACTIVE IN SCHOOL AFFAIRS

School Directors and Parents Asked to Aid in Co-operative Movement in County

IT WAS STARTED IN 1932

Plan is Now Being Reorganized Under Leadership of Charles Boehm, Sup't

School directors and parents were invited to take a more active part in the "Bucks County Co-operative Movement in Education" as this movement was expanded at a meeting held in the County Education Building at Doylestown. This co-operative movement initiated in 1932 is being reorganized under the leadership of Charles Boehm, superintendent of Bucks county schools. Bucks county school people have received a great deal of favorable commendation for work achieved as a result of the co-operative movement. Separate co-operative committees for studying social studies, textbooks, Bucks county history for schools, and literature for seventh and eighth grade pupils are already being formed. The County Teachers' Institute will be planned and carried on by an advisory committee of teachers and directors.

At the meeting Dr. W. A. Roberts, past president of the Pennsylvania State School Directors' Association, indicated that some co-operative study in health and in athletic competition would be profitable. He also thought that some of these problems might well be discussed at meetings of the County School Directors' Association. Dr. Adolf Berg, school director of Doylestown township, was particularly interested in the problems of homework, promotion of pupils into high school, and failures in arithmetic.

Other members of the general committee present were Cecelia Snyder, Bensalem; Mando Cathers, Solebury; May Stringer, Wrightstown; Sara Buckley, Lower Southampton; Matrona Walck, Buckingham; Clair Merkel, Springfield, and Hollis Lachet, Doylestown. Isaac Gross, Plumstead, and Mrs. John Flood, of New Hope, were unable to be present.

Some 30 different co-operative committees have been active at various times since 1932. Teachers of different school districts interested in a certain problem were invited to organize and study the particular problem. Educational consultants from many eastern colleges and universities were available to assist the committees.

Four co-operative committees brought distinction to Bucks County. The committee on elementary school report cards developed a report card which was one of the outstanding printed forms available anywhere. More than 50,000 copies have been sold. A committee of English teachers printed an English style book and sold more than 5,000 copies for use in Bucks county schools.

Two different committees dealing with rural problems achieved notable

25 Holsteins in Herd At Hulmeville Test High

BRATTLEBORO, Vt., Mar. 12—Twenty-five registered Holstein owned by Joseph O. Canby, Hulmeville, Pa., produced enough milk during the past year to provide 109 families of four with four quarts of milk daily for the entire year. The average production per cow was 497.3 pounds butterfat from 13,699 pounds milk.

The average cow in Mr. Canby's herd produced nearly three times as much butterfat as the country's average dairy cow, using U. S. Department of Agriculture statistics as the basis of comparison. The herd was on a three-times-daily milking schedule.

The highest producer in the herd was the 5-year-old Greenwood Dean Ormsby Jacqueline that produced 719.3 pounds butterfat from 19,364 pounds milk in 330 days.

The production records obtained by Mr. Canby will be useful in planning a breeding program for the further improvement of the herd.

Testing was supervised by The Holstein-Friesian Association of America, Brattleboro, in co-operation with the Pennsylvania State College.

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

A meeting of the supervising principals of Bucks County public schools is scheduled to be held in Doylestown on Monday, March 24th.

The session in the administration building annex, North Main street, in the county seat, will be held from 10.30 until 2.30 a. m., and the rating of the teachers will be discussed.

John J. Hayes, husband of Mary Hayes, died Saturday, at his home on the Newtown-Yardley road, near Newtown, following a stroke suffered a week ago. He was 78 years old.

A son of the late Patrick and Catherine Hayes, Wrightstown, he was a resident of the Newtown section all of his life.

Besides his widow, he is survived by a daughter, Miss Nellie E. Hayes, Newtown, and several cousins in Philadelphia.

Said to be the only creator and copyist of "Fraktur" art in the United States, John D. Souder, of near Sellersville, has received the distinct honor of having more than 50 of his colored pen drawings placed in the Metropolitan Museum, New York. Souder lives three and one-half miles southwest of this borough, opposite historic old Indianfield church.

Mr. Souder several days ago celebrated his 76th birthday anniversary on the old Souder homestead, which he farmed from his youth up until his wife died several years ago.

All his life Mr. Souder has had a love for the intriguing lore of the Pennsylvania Dutch. He kept right on collecting old books, manuscripts and the illuminated writings in color for which he now is recognized as a master. Since his wife died several years ago the Mennonite churchman abandoned farming and pursued his first love. He spent four years reproducing with all authenticity the "Pennsylvania Dutch Art Manuscripts" or "Fraktur," specimens known in art as "Foreschriften," "House Segen," book plates, baptismal certificates, color designs and merit cards.

As soon as arrangements can be made the best specimens of his entire collection of several hundred will be reproduced in full color by a new process of direct color photo-engraving to go into the Metropolitan Museum.

During the past few years he has had his works reproduced in the rotogravure sections of metropolitan papers.

During the past week Mr. Souder was surprised by a visit from Samuel R. Swartley, Lansdale, a former teacher who helped him learn the lost art of embellished writing. Mr. Swartley is in his 85th year. In return Mr. Souder surprised Mr. Swartley by presenting him a colored pen drawing he made while attending his school.

Winters, in another action for damages, pay out of that sum $463.70 for funeral expenses, and one-third to herself and two-thirds to the guardian of Earl Clark Winters, 3, and Joan Winters, 2.

The first of a series of dinner conferences sponsored by the Bucks County Real Estate Board will be held in Doylestown this evening. The subject for discussion will be "What I Would Stress in Publicizing Bucks County."

William A. Rossiter, Jr., of Langhorne, secretary of the Board, said today that the Bucks County Real Estate Board is planning a number of important meetings and conferences for 1941, most of which will be for the purposes of planting and fostering the seed of co-operation between all professional men, banks, building and loan associations, industries and organizations that are closely allied with real estate and realtors.

"Such co-operation cannot help but be of the greatest benefit to the county, its people, its prospective home owners and to all others concerned," Rossiter declared.

At the dinner conference tomorrow night the members and invited guests will present ideas and suggestions on how to better publicize Bucks County and to let the Board know how its service can be improved and to enlighten them of any shortcomings.

Bristol Woman Tries To Leap Out Hospital Window

Philadelphia, Mar. 12—Two nurses and an orderly formed a human chain today to rescue a Mrs. Catherine Campanaro, 38, of 1014 Elm street, Bristol, a patient at the Hahnemann Hospital, who walked from her bed and climbed to a precarious perch outside a fifth floor window ledge.

Miss Doris Van Sciver, Bristol, one of the nurses grabbed the woman around the legs as she allegedly threatened to jump and held on until her companion and an orderly arrived. Meanwhile, police summoned by the screams of other women in the ward, rushed to the scene, but the three rescuers succeeded in pulling Mrs. Campanaro to safety.

Mrs. Campanaro entered the hospital five days ago for observation. Doctors said that Mrs. Campanaro was not seriously ill. She was placed back in bed after being taken from the ledge.

Yugoslavia To Sign Pact

Belgrade, Mar. 12—Yugoslavia definitely will sign a pact of friendship and non-aggression with Germany and Italy this week-end but all Axis pressure to bring this country into the tripartite agreement thus far has failed, it was learned today.

German minister Heeren called on Yugoslavian foreign minister Cibearevic this morning and discussed at great length the lines the agreement will take.

Neutral observers in Belgrade were convinced the Axis was working at full strength for outright Yugoslavian adherence in a war agreement.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

Defense Intrigue

Washington, March 11. THE other reason for concern over the defense program is the persistence with which the more advanced New Dealers intrigue to take it over. The President is surrounded by these itching individuals. They are his closest companions and friends. In the past their influence with him has been potent.

FROM the beginning they have been resentful of the industrialists whom Mr. Roosevelt brought in to man the defense organization. They recognized the necessity of bringing them in, but were determined that they should not run the job. First, they threw their weight against adoption of the old Baruch War Industries Board plan, which had really worked in the last war. Then they were insistent that there be no chairman of the original defense commission and, finally, they were responsible for the present dual directorship by which labor leaders with "coequal authority" are used to balance the industrialists all the way down the line.

THE great question in Washington now is, What next? It is well understood that a new rearrangement is being planned, but exactly the form it will take no one definitely knows. Various forecasts have come from those usually well informed about the inner New Deal activities. One reliable pair of journalists insist that a new super-Cabinet is to be erected, which will take over from the OPM all matters of policy, leaving the latter to concentrate wholly on production. Mr. Harry Hopkins, who not long ago was made a member of a so-called "production-planning board," is said to be slated as "secretary" of the new Cabinet.

IN this capacity he is—so it was stated—to act as a general co-

Percy D. Earll Files Action Against John C. Wichser

Earll Claims He Was "Seriously and Permanently" Injured When Jolted Off Truck

Two prominent Bristol residents are involved in a suit scheduled to be called for trial tomorrow morning at a session of Civil Court at Doylestown in which Percy D. Earll, Filmore street, is suing John C. Wichser, Dorrance street, for $50,000.

Wichser is a tinsmith contractor and a member of Bristol Borough Council while Earll is employed at the Paterson Parchment Paper Co. at Bristol.

The action is the result of injuries allegedly sustained September 17, 1939, when Earll is said to have been jolted off the rear of Wichser's truck while riding as the guest of the defendant.

Earll is represented by Webster S. Achey, Esq., of Doylestown, while the attorneys for Wichser are Howard I. James, Esq., and John P. Betz, Jr., Esq., both of Bristol.

According to the statement of claim filed in the office of the Prothonotary, Ezra D. Miller, the plaintiff alleges that on September 17, 1939 at about 7.15 p. m., while riding on the truck of the defendant and as his guest from Emille to Bristol, that the said defendant operated his truck in a reckless and negligent manner and at a high rate of speed on Beaver street, Bristol.

THE GIRL SCOUT MOVEMENT

The Girl Scout organization in the United States was founded by Mrs. Juliette Gordon Low at Savannah, Ga., on March 12, 1912. From the small group of girls and women who met with Mrs. Low on that historic date the movement has grown to more than 600,000 members, of whom more than 100,000 are adults. The benefits and influence of the Girl Scout program have been brought to more than two and a half million girls in the past twenty-nine years.

War and threats of war color our lives. The Girl Scout organization knows about the needs of young people at such times not only because it has the experience of the last war to guide it but also because it has reports of the Scouts and Guides of Europe under actual war and pre-war conditions. Great Britain, for example, has discovered that never were the Guides more useful, never was there a more important job than the continued education of young people for democracy at a time when democracy is threatened.

Great Britain had to learn this the hard way—by feeling the impact of totalitarian nations which had been quick to seize upon youth organizations and turn them to their own use.

Girl Scouting stands for good citizenship in a democracy. Because it stands for that, it has been fostered and aided by nations that want their citizens to grow up to think for themselves, be self-reliant, resourceful, active participants in their own government.

Today's emergency means that Girl Scouting should be made available to more girls—to all the girls who are on its waiting lists—before it is too late. To expand Girl Scouting is to help extend democracy's first line of defense.

TURNING CO-ED

The last stronghold of determined masculinity has crumbled. The Harvard Club in New York, according to a report, has had to go the way of the others and has opened its sacrosanct portals to the women.

The relentless march of femininity has swept away the once made exclusiveness of the historic clubdom of New York. First to go was the Cornell Club in East Forty-Eighth street, which installed a ladies' powder room and a cocktail lounge. Then came the opening of the doors of the Princeton Club in East Thirty-Ninth Street, where today women may enter as freely as men; then followed Columbia and Dartmouth, Pennsylvania and Yale. The last was the one which broke the back of Harvard's resistance. If the Blues do it, the Crimson must also.

The disappearance of once quite masculine haunts is one of the most curious of the developments of what some day may be called the Funny Forties. Of course, business and the merry sound of the cash register may have had something to do with all this; but anyway, the retreats have felt the effect of the spirit of the Funny Forties, the rival of the Gay Nineties in the research of future historians.

The time comes when the big league pitcher needs more money as he sees by his X-ray plates that he is due for a big year in '41.

It has been brought to our attention that a report has been circulated locally to the effect that Mr. A. Terneson, of 225 Otter Street, was discharged from our employ because of discrepancies in stock inventories controlled by him.

It is our desire to correct this report and to state that it is absolutely untrue and without foundation in fact. Mr. Terneson left us with his record clear and his leaving was made necessary solely because of changes in the personnel of our organization.

Weds On Eve of Leaving For The Reformatory

The two mothers and several members of both families; and Sheriff William L. Stackhouse, since the bridegroom, who was sentenced by president judge Hiram H. Keller in the Court of Common Pleas last week to serve not less than two years in the Huntingdon Reformatory, is now in the county prison awaiting to be taken to the reformatory.

The bride, who said she had known her husband-to-be for four years, attempted to add a traditional bridal touch by wearing an artificial orchid.

"If I had enough time I would have bought a half dozen roses," said the bride, and addressing anyone who would listen, "Don't you think the judge might have given him less than two years?"

Bennish, a foundry worker, pleaded guilty to a hold-up which was staged in the Springtown Hotel. He had been in trouble twice before, once having served almost a year in the reformatory for stealing a car.

The two mothers, both of whom had to consent to the marriage since the couple are minors, did not understand a word of the ceremony.

The honeymoon, which lasted less than five minutes and consisted of a farewell kiss and embrace on the wind-swept porch of the James' residence, was minus any rice throwing, tooting of horns or mingled gaiety of congratulations and kisses.

The bride, who had dark tresses and wore no hat, looked sadly lonely as her husband entered the sheriff's car and was whisked away in a cloud of snow.

"Maybe," she said, "I can get down to see him before he leaves for Huntingdon; I hope I can"—and she walked toward a waiting car with her mother, Mrs. Amanda Babio.

ordinator for all defense activities, as well as liaison officer between the President and the defense agencies. This scheme, of course, would put Mr. Hopkins, because of his closeness to the President, in a position of very great importance. And it would practically submerge the Knudsen-Hillman board. There are two reasons for doubting that it will develop as outlined. One is that Mr. Hopkins is physically unable to work hard more than a few hours a day—some say two; others, seven. The other is that he is utterly without experience for such a task—though, perhaps, that will not be regarded as a handicap.

AN even stranger proposal was reported last week, by Time magazine, as being under consideration. This centers around the same sort of construction of a super-cabinet of four members from the present Cabinet of ten, but its striking feature is in connection with the office of Secretary of State. The idea advanced was that Mr. Hull would retire and William O. Douglas, the most radical of the New Deal Supreme Court justices, take his place as Secretary of State. Mr. Douglas, it was said, then would dominate defense policy, and thus the New Dealers would be firmly established in the saddle and the industrialists relegated to a subordinate role.

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

"Holiday? But yourself's just intimated that this is no legal holiday." There was a chuckling note in Dynamite's brogue.

"Legal or not," came Jean's hot retort, "the bank is closed. In such case, any court would hold—"

"Then take your case to Juneau, me fine sea-lawyer, and get the court to rule on it. I'll warrant this fishin' season will be over by the time ye get a decision!"

Silence dragged before Jean admitted, tersely, "Right. You've caught me napping. I must pay for it. What are your terms, O'Moore?"

"Ye heard 'em yesterday. Do your cannin' ashore; sell me the hull of the Glory. Then ye'll get every fish the O'Moore fleet nets this season."

"Impossible. Every cent Aunt Jack has is tied up in this. We'd lose the first of the season, and—"

"Your aunt's losses are no concern of mine," rasped Dynamite. "She—and you—made a dirty gurry-scow of my Glory—"

"Listen, Captain! I don't know a thing about the ancient row between you and Aunt Jack; but in the present instance you've got us all wrong. Our plans for the Glory—"

"Belay!" The hall clock began slowly to strike eleven. "I'll give ye one more chance, Reynall. Will ye sell me the Glory's hull—today?"

"I will not."

The clock ceased striking. A long pause. Then the sound of heavy paper being deliberately torn into shreds. "That ends your contract, Reynall. And all business between us."

"Not quite, Captain. You're still pledged to supply my company with fish during the next twenty-four days."

"Wha—what d'ye mean, young fella?"

"Just this—among the assets of the Bates Company, now owned by Baranov Packers, is a certain contract made last year. It binds Bates to buy fish only from you. But it also binds you to keep his plant supplied to the limit of capacity at all times when fish are running. I mean to hold you to that contract."

Dynamite's laugh boomed out a little too loudly. "Hot Hot! That contract died last fall when the herring season ended."

"Morally, perhaps it did. But we're adhering strictly to the letter, not the spirit. That contract was filled in on a printed form which reads 'until one year from date.' That date is the middle of next month. Legally, you're stuck with it, O'Moore."

"Um-m-m-m. I suppose, now, ye have a legal copy of that agreement, all signed and witnessed, Reynall?"

"You know I haven't. Bates trusted you, and left the only signed copy in your hands. But I have the unsigned carbon, with a notation in Bates's handwriting to confirm the existence of the signed document. Do you deny that it exists?"

"Divil a bit. 'Tis in me safe at the moment. But there it stays, Reynall, till the administrator of the Bates estate calls for it. I recognize no right of yours to demand it."

"I can get an order from the Federal Court in Juneau forcing you to produce it."

"So ye can!" Dynamite's cheerful exclamation hinted of sly, secret knowledge. "But—could ye get it inside of twenty-four days? Try it, Reynall."

Again, silence. Then Dynamite's voice, uncompromising but not unkindly. "Ye're licked, Reynall. Be man enough to admit it and make the best of it. Set up your plant ashore, turn me old ship back to me—and pack fish. Ye have the name of bein' lucky in a tight spot. With luck, and me helpin', ye have a good chance of makin' your pack. But—try to buck me, and all the luck in the world won't save your bacon. I'm warnin', and I'm advisin' ye fair, me lad."

"Fair!" Jean's tone was one of suppressed fury. "You trick your way out of one just contract, and repudiate another. You offer me aid, but only on ruinous conditions; and you threaten me with ruin if I refuse. The devil with such 'fair' methods! They do credit to your early training as a high-handed thief and seal pirate."

"Belay!" A fist banged an accompaniment to Dynamite's angry roar. "I gave ye a fair chance, and ye flung it back into me teeth. Now, ye insultin' young fool, ye've got a fish war on your hands. A fish war—d'ye know what that means? A fight with no rules, and no quarter. Once in it, neither law nor luck will save ye."

"Save your breath, O'Moore. You can't scare me with your fish war."

"But I can break ye—and I will! I'll block ye from buyin' fish anywhere in Alaskan waters. I'll smash ye flat, and take the Glory for—"

"Before ye do either, you'll know you've been in a fight, O'Moore. I'm going to put up my pack—aboard the Glory. What's more, I'll collect, somehow, a just payment on that contract you refuse to honor. Good day, sir."

Sondra had barely time to step aside before Jean strode through above her rage at Reynall. "But this isn't Baranov's birthday, Dynamite." Then, she pointed an accusing finger at her exuberant grand sire. "Look here, lamb! I just remembered—I heard you phoning Mr. Jarvis yesterday about going fishing. Do you think that was quite—well, ethical?"

"Ethical be darned! Have they been ethical with me? Look down there at the thing they've made of the Glory! Do ye call that—?" He slumped suddenly in his chair, his violence gone, and passed a hand wearily over his eyes. When he spoke again his voice was husky with emotion. "She's me old ship, Sondra. And she has a soul—the soul of a fine, high-strung woman. 'Twould tear the old heart out of me to leave her there, soiled and mis-handled, the summer through. And the door and slammed it behind him. She darted forward, overtaking him at the head of the stairs.

"Jean! I—I—" Words died at the sight of his blazing eyes, his white set face.

"Well?" he demanded, harshly. "Is it necessary that you tell me, as well as show me how little regard you have for—?" He checked himself, and then, with the air of one grasping at a forlorn hope, went on eagerly. "But maybe you didn't go to the cupola last night, so you didn't hear me explain—"

"I went. I was there, Jean, but—"

"That's enough!" She shrank from his cold vehemence. "Your grandfather has just called me a fool. I seem to have been one—about you. But I've learned plenty today about O'Moore tactics, and O'Moore trickery."

He brushed past her and went running down the stairs.

Sondra turned and flung herself into the sitting room where her grandfather sat sliding his small, scarred hands over the model of the Glory. He grinned up at her from under the puckish slant of his white brows.

"Hoh, darlin'! Ye missed the fireworks. I've just sent the Reynall cub scuddin' off with his boilers rumblin' and pitch fair boilin' from his deck seams. Faith, Sondra, ye should have seen the face of him when I tore up that villainous contract he thought he had me stuck with. 'Cash or certified check,' says L. And he helpless to get either with the bank closed!" He threw back his silvery head and roared with laughter.

Sondra, saying nothing, regarded him with mingled admiration and disapproval.

"Fit to be tied, he was, Sondra; and hollerin' 'foul tactics!' As if I could help it if Jarvis decided to board the Tanya and go strip-fishin' on the birthday of Alexander Baranov."

Sondra's innate honesty rose

OF course, there are a few things wrong with this idea, too. One is that Mr. Hull, who has a far stronger place in the esteem and affection of the American people than any other member of the Administration, has no intention of resigning. The suggestion of supplanting him with such a man as Mr. Douglas shows the feverish state of mind of those who hatch these plots. The public reaction to that would be very bad. Another is the fact that, much as Mr. Douglas enjoys these backstage conspiracies to take him off the bench, and dearly as he loves to pose as being bored by the enforced aloofness of Supreme Court membership, it is unlikely that he is foolish enough to relinquish the dignity and security of his present position for any such dubious arrangement as this. Yet that it has been discussed by his friends—and with him—there is little room for doubt.

NEW suggestions for rearranging the defense organization, so as to make its direction more dominantly New Dealish, appear every week. They emanate from the same little group of radicals who conceived the third-term movement nearly two years ago and who are still in closer White House communion than anyone else. In general, their disposition is to look upon all the industrialists as incurable public enemies—except a few like Mr. Averill Harriman, who have been pro-New Deal since 1932. In the end, their hope is to strip all the businessmen here of real power, reduce Mr. Knudsen, whom they have disparaged for months, to the role of a good-will factory inspector and speechmaker.

IN fact, they are eager to make this defense job a New Deal job and get it out of the hands of men who have "always been against us." Linked with the desire to do this is the desire to get in position to implement their ideas for further social and economic reforms along New Deal lines when the war ends. How much the President knows about these plans, and how far he sympathizes with them, no one is in position to say with certainty. What is known is that they are in the minds of the men who have been closest to him and most influential with him in the past. What is further known is that these New Dealers, to use one of their own words, are constantly "needling" him to go in their direction. These plotters will not get all they want, but the best judgment is that, soon or late, they will get somewhere. And that is disturbing.

ON THE SCREENS

GRAND THEATRE

Another and greater adventure into the realm of movie magic is offered current audiences viewing "The Invisible Woman" at the Grand Theatre.

According to John Fulton, young technical wizard who created "The Invisible Man" in 1933 and "The Invisible Man Returns" in 1939, the new film contains a hundred per cent more trick scenes than either of its predecessors.

Unlike the former pictures, "The Invisible Woman" is strictly a comedy, in which use of astounding photographic effects provides hilarity ranging from sophisticated comedy to slapstick.

BRISTOL THEATRE

One of the finest casts ever assembled for a film musical was selected by Producer-Director Herbert Wilcox to appear in support of Anna Neagle in RKO Radio's "No, No, Nanette," modern screen version of the famous Broadway smash. Playing pivotal roles are Roland Young, Richard Carlson, Victor Mature, Helen Broderick, ZaSu Pitts, Eve Arden, Tamara, Billy Gilbert and Stuart Robertson.

Joseph McDonald appears in "Romance of the Rio Grande," today at the Bristol Theatre.

RITZ THEATRE

Victor Jory has gone "bad" again. Following a series of sympathetic roles, the handsome screen favorite returns to a menace characterization in "Give Us Wings," Universal attraction at the Ritz Theatre.

Jory is one of the few leading film personalities who is at home in both romantic and villainous portrayals.

Dorris Bowdon, the girl who brought John Steinbeck's tragic "Rosasharn" to life with such compelling realism on the screen is currently featured in "Jennie," 20th Century-Fox film, which is playing at the Ritz Theatre, her first role since she won so much favorable comment in the sensational film version of "The Grapes of Wrath."

Then it is stated that the truck struck a manhole near the Forge Bridge on Beaver street and that the plaintiff was jolted off and suffered severe injuries, including a fractured skull, right leg and right arm was partially paralyzed and that an extracranial clot on the brain was created. It is contended that the plaintiff suffered a partial loss of vision of the left eye and vision of the right eye and that his nervous system suffered shock. A surgical operation on the brain was found to be necessary and performed. As the result of the accident Earl contends that his earning power was reduced and that he suffered an entire loss of wages from September 17, 1939 to May 15, 1940 at $30 per week.

Danger To Country By Alcohol Stressed

read by the secretary, Mrs. Raymond Beswick. Miss Jane Rogers reported a goodly balance in the treasury. A gift of $5 was ordered donated for the preservation of the Frances Willard Hotel in Philadelphia. The 11-county convention to be held in Bristol Methodist Church on April 15th and 16th was discussed and the following committees appointed: hospitality, Mrs. Elizabeth Anderson, Miss Gertrude Pope, Mrs. Andrew Soila and Mrs. James R. Galley; registration, Mrs. Doron Green and Mrs. Sarah Douglas; entertainment, Miss Mary H. Lucas, Mrs. West and Miss McCoy. The program promises to be one of vital interest at this time. A fine speaker will address in the evening, and the majority of the several churches will contribute to the worthwhileness of the program as a whole. The Bristol high school glee club will render numbers under direction of Charles Quigley, who will also sing solos.

"Which way is the United States headed?" was brought to the attention of the members concerning the use of alcohol. It was stated that "five pints per week, per capita, was the average consumption of alcoholic beverages, chiefly wine, in France last September, when the Vichy regime pronounced alcoholism the chief cause of the moral collapse of that country. This makes those interested in the well being of the youth of our land wonder just what the influence of alcohol of any kind is doing to the young men who have given themselves to the defense of our country."

"Legislative action by Federal Government seems to be the only answer to widespread reform," it was brought out. "When the church people of America hand together, and first force their local governments to clean up liquor and vice conditions and then unite with others all over the country to put up a strong remonstrance, then Washington must listen and act accordingly to defend the defenders of our country."

The meeting closed with the benediction, to meet at the home of Miss Laura Ellis, April 8th.

success. The one committee organized a modern schedule for one teacher schools, another has been continuously preparing reading book lists for grades seven and eight. According to Mr. Boehm, the concept of democratic co-operative supervision is being widely accepted and it implies that very successful classroom teachers will have a larger part in placing school programs and policies than they have ever had. In a wider sense interested persons in a community will sit down and assist in planning and not merely co-operate in the execution of the program.

Commodity Price Rise Considered By Farmers citizens of this county, is to whether prices shall be "fixed" in the United States, as has been done in most of Europe to date.

Presiding at the meetings, and extending a welcome on behalf of the St. Francis School, and the committee in charge, was Daniel G. Hopkins, Torresdale.

In the course of his remarks, Mr. Horst stated that "For 1941 we must expect prices to rise. History has proven that such is the normal course of events, during the period of a war." He considered at length the economic conditions in Europe, adding that in spite of fixed prices in England, food prices there have been advanced 48%.

In turning attention to employment conditions in this county, Mr. Horst said that when the armament project arrived thousands more were given employment. "Two weeks ago we were told there would be needed in factories throughout this land, six million more workers. Last week in Pittsburgh one industry advertised for large numbers of men, and two out of every three who applied wanted 'white collar' jobs. But it is found that men coming from the rural sections want work that they can do in overalls." Because of the attracting of farm workers into industrial plants, Mr. Horst told there is naturally a scarcity of farm workers. He suggested that farmers in each community pool not only their labor, but also their machinery this year in order to overcome this difficulty.

The farmers were advised not to over-plant crops. "We are again faced with surplus commodities. Stay normal for the present. This seems the best policy this year," he advised. He mentioned that one Pittsburgh company is not only building a new plant in Cleveland, O., this year, but adding considerably to its Pennsylvania factory, thus adding 6,000 workers within the next few months. "We can see what that will do to the farmers in their need for workers. Let us pool our interests to the best advantage."

Another evening speaker was Robert McKinley, representing the Philadelphia Dairy Council, who spoke on "Use of Milk and Vegetables in Our Diet." Mr. McKinley, by means of a story, impressed upon his listeners the value of milk and vegetables in promoting health and attractiveness.

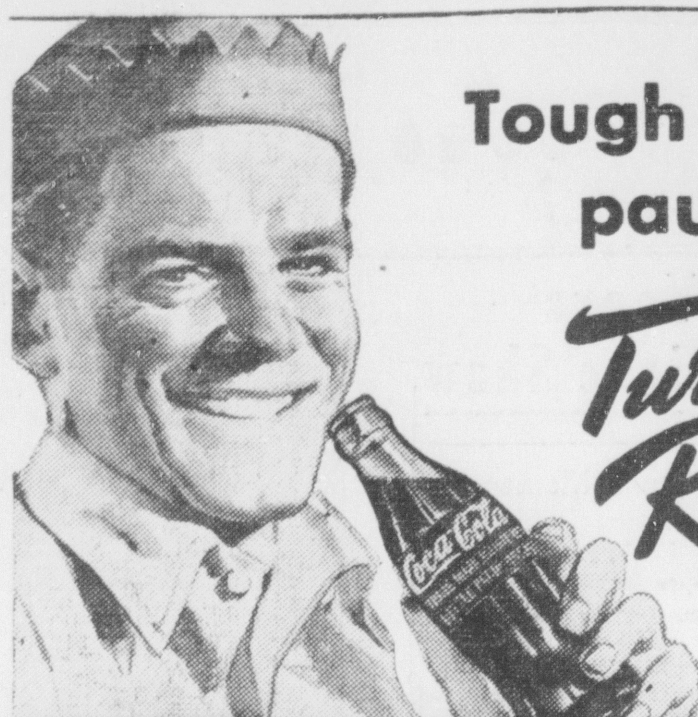

A high-light of the evening was the presentation of a question bee, in which teams from the two counties vied for honors, with Bucks county team coming out victorious. Miss Edna A. Stephany, home economics extension representative of Bucks county, directed the bee, and to the high scorer on each team a potted plant was presented. The plants were given to the Misses Barbour and Smith. The winning team, Bucks county, was composed of: Mrs. Homer Jackson, William White, A. C. Thompson, and Miss Barbour; while from Philadelphia county came the following representatives: the Misses Smith and Russo; and Messrs. Charles Simon and Newtown Comly.

The committee in charge of the day's events included Mr. and Mrs. E. K. Bonner, Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Dudley, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel G. Hopkins, Mr. and Mrs. William White. They planned for the affair a display of clothing, canning, hobbies, house plants, cut flowers, vegetables and farm crops. Arranged on the platform in the gymnasium were many of these items. From the St. Francis greenhouses came a variety of blooming plants; also from school gardens fine specimens of vegetables, including corn, carrots, beets and potatoes. Eggs were also displayed.

Mrs. Daniel G. Hopkins had one entire table, and a large section of the wall filled with her hobby collections. Not only were her oil painting, and button collection shown, but also handwork such as hooked rugs, wool-worked pictures, coverlets featuring flowers in wool, fancy sachets, embroidered pieces, etc. Dresses, aprons, embroidered and crocheted pieces, and other items were also shown by: Mrs. Arthur F. Gibson, Mrs. George Cope, Miss Rachel Bartine, Mrs. George Smith, Mrs. Frank Minster, Miss Frances M. Barney, Miss Louise Bartine, Miss Sarah Richardson, Elizabeth W. Bonner, Miss Myra Smith, Mrs. Howey, H. Behm had several paintings hung.

The main speaker of the afternoon was J. O. Pepper, extension entomologist from Pennsylvania State College. Mr. Pepper illustrated his talk, "Control of Corn Borer," by showing motion pictures in color. He explained and showed by means of the film, how the borer has penetrated this section to some extent, and how it affects both sweet and field corn. Mr. Pepper told that in a survey of the 67 counties in Pennsylvania it had been found that last year the loss to farmers through the corn borer had totaled $119,000. The loss was divided thus: $62,500 on field corn; and $56,500 on sweet corn. "We are interested mainly in getting the folks to do something about extermination of the borer. This pest at one time practically wiped the dairy industry out in Canada, and it required five or six years for that industry to stage a come-back. . . . The borer was first found in the United States in the Massachusetts area in 1917, but we believe it has been here since 1909. It first appeared in Pennsylvania in the Northwestern section, in Erie county, in 1919. It apparently made its way there from Canada. We found when it reached the Southeastern counties that it jumped by leaps and bounds, because of the fact that here we were getting two generations a season. In the northern tier counties they have but one generation a season; while in Southern Virginia there are found three generations produced each year. In the latter section the loss on sweet corn is practically 100 per cent each year."

The speaker differentiated between the corn borer and the corn ear worm; telling how the borer works into any part of the ear, oftentimes getting between rows of kernels and working the length of the ear. "It spoils an ear of corn worse than the corn ear worm." The need of a control campaign was stressed. "The whole solution of the problem is in agricultural practices. There should be an entire clean-up of corn-stalks and pithy stemmed plants, in which the borer stays throughout the winter. In Centre county we found that from one valley where corn was only topped, instead of being cut low, the damage spread widely, infesting other areas of the same county where corn had been cut low. Methods for "burning over" of the corn; shredding for ensilage, the placing of fine wire mesh on cribs to prevent spread of the moth when it emerges from the cob, and other preventive measures for spread of the pest were suggested. Community action was urged, with the farmers being advised to ask the farmers who do not co-operate in helping of the pests, to give their help. Spraying methods were also considered.

4-H club members reported on their activities during the afternoon. Miss Lillian Russo, Torresdale, exhibited an ensemble she had fashioned, including a dress, hat and bag. This work she had carried out as part of the club clothing project. Messrs. Edward and Newton Comly, and Harold Wenker, Jr., Philadelphia county, told of their experiences in winning fourth place in the potato judging contest at the recent Pennsylvania Farm Show in Harrisburg. Each took a different phase of the show, and gave interesting information.

Vegetables which he and others from this area saw on a "good-will" pilgrimage to Florida last month, were described by A. C. Thompson, Morrisville R. D., president of the Vegetable Growers' Association of America. Mr. Thompson not only described the fruit orchards and vegetable fields in the Southern State, and methods of packing and shipping same, but also showed colored motion pictures of high-lights of the journey. He mentioned that the rainfall this year has been very high and the temperature low there. In connection with vegetable yield, he informed that Florida is producing 65,000 carloads per year. He told of visiting one farm where over 2,000 acres of celery are grown annually by sub-irrigation, with pipes 20 inches underground. "This irrigation was not required this year. The celery is late, but it appeared to be in fine condition." He mentioned the large acreages planted to cabbage, cucumbers, lettuce, and other vegetables; also the manner in which gladioli, sweet peas, and tropical fruits are grown. The pictures included scenes at a grapefruit cannery; fields where cucumbers are "boarded" over at night, with the boards being tipped back later and the vines permitted to run over the boards. Types of drainage were discussed, with the drilling of "mole tunnels" being shown in the films. The method of pre-cooling celery before packing, with water slightly above the freezing point being run on it for 20 minutes, was told of; as was also the method of waxing vegetables.

In attendance at the sessions also were William Greenwalt and Charles K. Halliwell, farm agents of Bucks and Philadelphia counties, respectively. Mr. Greenwalt gave information on hybrid corn, and the growing of seedlings in clean sand.
